“Bankhar Dog and Herder” Is the Pack Leader

The photo of a Mongolian herder at rest with his dog and horse was judged the “Single Best Photo” in the DWAA 2016 Writing competition. The photo was submitted by Kim Campbell Thornton. Kim described the scene, “I took the photo last June when I was in Mongolia on an expedition with a friend who is a wildlife artist. We had dual goals: to find Gobi bears (no luck) and to learn about Bankhar dogs.”

Kim describes herself as the personal assistant/mentor/activities director for two Cavalier King Charles Spaniels and one longhaired Chihuahua, a PetConnection columnist, Creature Comforts columnist, MSNBC.com contributor and author of: Careers With Dogs; Bloodhounds: A Complete Pet Owner’s Manual; Mastiffs: A Complete Pet Owner’s Manual; and The Everything Dog Health Book.

It’s been a busy few months! As your new president, I feel an enormous amount of pressure to continue DWAA’s proud legacy that started in 1935. It’s a bit overwhelming at times. So I have a Post-it note on my desk to remind me of my ultimate goal in this role. It reads: HELP MEMBERS HELP DOGS.

DWAA’s leadership team has been working hard toward that objective. Our big news is that we’ve signed a contract with the New Yorker Hotel to host our annual awards banquet next February. Thanks to your input on the member survey, we’re mixing things up and holding the event the Saturday night before the Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show so that members can enjoy a night out after AKC Meet the Breeds. We’ll have more news about the event the closer we get to February 10, 2018. In the meantime, save the date!

We’ve been ramping up content on DWAA’s website (Dogwriters.org). In the Members Only section, you’ll find samples of query letters that led to assignments in “Successful Queries,” and “Editor Insights” features advice from editors of dog-centric publications.

We’re grateful to the editors who took time out of their busy schedules to be the first to participate: Mara Bovsun of AKC Family Dog; Laura Drucker of Tails Pet Magazine; Amy Tokic of PetGuide.com; Larry Lindner of Your Dog; Beth Stultz of Pet Sitter’s World; and Joe McGinnis of The Doll-McGinnis Publications (ShowSight, Top Notch Toys, Sight & Scent, The Doberman Digest and The Orient Express). We hope you’ll use the information they’ve shared and the samples in “Successful Queries” to craft professional query letters that lead to assignments. You’ll also find an AP Style cheat sheet in our website’s forum to help you along the path to new partnerships.

In other news, I’m thrilled to announce that member Lisa Begin-Kruysman is spearheading a new webinar program to bring added benefit to our members. If you have an idea for a speaker or topic, please email Lisa: pst39crd@aol.com.

We’re also working to strengthen existing programs. Dawn Taylor is compiling a list of member Twitter handles so that we can follow one another and retweet articles, book news and awards. (You can email your handle to Dawn at DTaylor_VA@live.com). Please follow DWAA_US and tag us when you have something you want to share so that

Dear Readers;

Let me introduce myself: I am Ruff Drafts’s new editor. I am honored that Jen Reeder and the members of the Board have entrusted me with the responsibility of becoming your digital communication Sherpa. I look forward to presenting content you’d like to share; interesting reads, tips and tactics from subject matter experts and updates from the board and committee chairs. For example, in this issue, Su Ewing provides details on our annual writing competition. Together with assistant editor, Morgan Humphrey, and DWAA webmaster and graphic designer, Angela Capodanno, we want to create a content sharing platform to showcase the work you do. Before getting too far into laying out the plans for the next few issues, I wanted to take this space to share a little about me.

I am a writer by training and a communicator by experience. I have a couple of degrees in journalism and one in public policy/communication theory. For most of my career I have worked in public relations; developing and coordinating communications programs, writing speeches (putting words in other people’s mouths) and working with local, state and national media (often as “unnamed sources said”). I’ve honed my skills in a series of industries; banking, newspapers and for a very long time, as the spokesperson for one of the nation’s largest public school districts. Now, in the third-third of my professional life, I am an adjunct college professor and a grant writer.

I became a “dog writer” by accident. After founding a dog park in 2000, I created a monthly newsletter to share member news and promote park sponsors. I discovered and joined DWAA to learn from the members. I’ve also written a teacher’s manual for an assisted animal therapy program dedicated to helping students with difficulty reading. My proofreaders are the two JRTs shown in the picture above (Sunny-L and Simone- R), strategically stationed underneath my keyboard to provide inspiration and distraction, often simultaneously.

Enough about me, now about Ruff Drafts. In addition to the standard components that you’ll find in every issue … the President’s Column and member news, we hope to bring issues that

2017 Writing Competition

By Su Ewing

It seems like we just finished last year’s contest and here we are, gearing up for this year’s!

Entries must have been written between September 1, 2016 and August 31, 2017. Submit entries between Monday, July 10 and Friday, September 8.

All the information you will need can be found in the list of rules on the website, as well as on the entry forms themselves, but here are a few tips that will make sorting and judging your entries easier on us and on the judges. All our judges are volunteers, so please make it easy for them to access and read your work.

If you are entering online, send ONE link for an entire article. Don't send a separate link for each page of the article. If the link is for the entire magazine, at least include the page number of your article on your entry form. Don't make a judge have to search the entire magazine for your piece! If this isn't possible, consider printing the article and sending a hard copy.

If you are sending a link, make sure it is not going to expire before the piece is judged.

If possible, send hard copies of books, rather than online links. Reading an entire book on line is not fun. Some judges won't do it, and without our judges, there's no contest.

If possible, when sending copies of articles, use 8 ½ by 11 paper instead of legal.

Do not staple your entry form to your entry. Use a paperclip.

If you are sending in multiple entries, put the amount paid for each individual entry on the entry form, and NOT the total amount sent for all the entries.

Good luck to everyone!

DWAA’s Yahoo group provides another opportunity to share news and learn from one another. If you haven’t joined and would like to, please send a note to Marsha Pugh and she’ll forward you an invite: marsha_pugh01@comcast.net.

Our new Ruff Drafts Editor Merrie Meyers (merrie.meyers@gmail.com) has exciting ideas for our quarterly newsletter, as you’ll see in this issue. Assistant Editor Morgan Humphrey (morganh25@gmail.com) will not only be assisting Merrie and writing articles, but curating content for our blog. Thank you for taking this on, ladies!

In fact, here’s some late-breaking news for them (and you!): Lea-Ann Germinder of Germinder & Associates will be handling DWAA’s public relations. This is great news for our authors since she’ll be promoting members’ new books at GoodNewsForPets.com in addition to other cross promotions.

I’m so grateful to all of the volunteers who have stepped forward to support DWAA. The work of dog writers is so important: every article and book that shares tips for responsible pet ownership or celebrates ways dogs enrich our lives makes life better for “man’s best friend.” Happy writing!

DWAA Annual Awards Banquet to Become a Real “New Yorker” Event

By Morgan Humphrey
RUFF DRAFTS ASSISTANT EDITOR

Next February, the Dog Writers Association of America (DWAA) annual awards banquet will be held in the famous New Yorker Hotel. Located directly across the street from Madison Square Garden, where the annual Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show is held, the New Yorker has a rich history of celebrity guests and awards.

The New Yorker was originally completed in 1930 in the popular Art Deco style, similarly to the Empire State Building and the Chrysler Building. At 43 stories high, it was considered the country’s largest building. Two years after its completion, the opening of the 8th Avenue Subway line gave all hotel guests a direct access tunnel into the subway. This convenience was advertised as “Your room is only three minutes from your train through your own private entrance,” with connections not only the subway line, but also Pennsylvania Station and Long Island Station. Today the tunnel is closed and used only for storage.

After closing for several years in the ‘70s, the hotel was renovated by the Unification Church twice, most recently in 2006, to completely outfit the hotel in modern heating and cooling systems, while maintaining the original style. Known for being the most technologically advanced hotel in the country, and at times, the world, in 1948, the New Yorker installed television sets into one hundred guest rooms, and claimed to have “the greatest number of television sets under one roof” in the world. There was an extendable indoor ice rink that held ice spectaculars at night. Perhaps most impressively, in 2008, the New Yorker was classified as a major milestone in the development of electrical engineering by the Institute of Electronics and Electrical Engineers. The hotel earned this title because of its personal power plant. This power plant could produce enough power to provide for a city of 25,000 people from 1930 to 1967, and could thus be considered an engineering marvel like no other. It was the largest private generating plant in the United States.

The New Yorker has also been called “home” by many celebrities. Nikola Tesla, the scientist credited for the usage of alternating current across the nation, spent the last decade of his life occupying two rooms of the New Yorker. The rooms he stayed in are memorialized with a plaque. NBC broadcast live from the Terrace Room, where several large bands such as Benny Goodman and Woody Herman also performed. The Brooklyn Dodgers stayed in the New Yorker during the 1941 World Series, and it was where the parents of former President Barack Obama stayed during their honeymoon. Muhammed Ali, another famous guest, stayed at the hotel while recovering after his infamous heavyweight boxing loss to Joe Frazier in Madison Square Garden. After 9/11, the New Yorker donated 10,000 of its rooms to volunteers, earning it recognition from both the New York Police Department and the Chicago Fire Department.

While staying at the New Yorker, guests can enjoy many of New York City’s attractions, including a few that are within walking distance. For DWAA members, the Westminster Kennel Club Dog Show is certainly the most significant. The New Yorker Hotel has a long history, as does the DWAA. This year DWAA members attending the annual Writing Competition Award Ceremony will be able to appreciate the impressive history of both.

HALL OF FAME INDUCTEE

I am thrilled with the recognition of being inducted into the Hall of Fame and appreciate the very kind words on the plaque and said during the DWAA banquet. I've been a member since 1971 and seen many of the great ones be inducted so I feel I'm in very esteemed company. Thank you to the members and the Dog Writers Association of America, one of the great dog-related organizations.

Fondly,

include thematic content. We will post upcoming issue themes and deadlines in several places – the website, Facebook page, email blast, etc. I hope that these themes are idea starters for you, and that they will stimulate submissions from members who may not feel they were the right fit for the publication in the past. And, while we're touching on submissions, just a note about length. Although this is primarily a digital publication, we do have a limit in the length (of time the reader will devote to any content). So, please keep submissions under 1,000 words, with 500-1,000 words preferred (1-2 pages, single spaced). We can link to additional resources for those readers interested in taking a deeper dive into your subject and/or related content. So, send us those urls or bitly's. And, please send pictures (300 dpi is recommended) and/or graphics if available. Did I forget anything? Please reach out and let me know. I am looking forward to hearing from you. Together, we can make Ruff Drafts a valuable member resource.

The Benefits of Agility

By Christina Potter

Agility is the fastest growing dog sport in the United States and it’s no wonder. The speed, the skill and the teamwork required for competition, make it intoxicating for both competitors and spectators alike.

In AKC agility, a dog and his handler must negotiate up to 20 obstacles consisting of jumps, teeters, weaves, dog walks, A-frames, tires, etc. The faster the team gets through the course, the better. Agility requires constant training, not only for conditioning, but also for trust building. The dog must trust that the handler will keep him safe on the course and the handler must trust that the dog will take the obstacle requested.

Agility is a challenging sport, even for the most accomplished competitors. It is stimulating for the body and mind of both canine and human alike. While competing may not be for every team, agility training will aid in daily life. Working with your dog on impulse control, on safely negotiating obstacles and on paying attention to you while in an aroused state of mind are skills required for healthy teamwork both on and off the course. Training your dog for agility will make for a more balanced, obedient and well-behaved dog.

Any healthy dog of any age is a good candidate for agility training. You can tailor your training program to suit your needs; whether you have a young dog that needs to burn off energy or an older dog that needs to burn off calories, all dogs will benefit. The demands of agility will undoubtedly help keep you both physically and mentally fit. And isn’t it better to spend quality time with your dog, instead of sitting in front of the TV eating potato chips while your dog lies around thinking about his next meal? For those of you already involved in agility, let’s spread the word on the rewards of getting involved in dog sports. Let’s invite our friends to our next agility trial or encourage them to take a class. For those of you not currently involved

Observance Breeds Awareness
Welcome the Dog “Daze” of Summer

By Lisa Begin-Kruysman

You’ve probably heard a long spell of warm muggy summer weather referred to as the “Dog Days.” Many might find it surprising that the phrase the Dog Days of Summer has nothing to do with man’s best friend. The period between the beginning of July through mid-August is when Sirius, the Dog Star, shines brightly in the summer night sky. It could also be said, however, that during this sweltering seasonal period we’re experiencing the Dog Daze of Summer – awed by the number of canines infiltrating American dog parks, beaches and family vacations.

In 2010, the year I launched my blog and book dedicated to National Dog Week established by Captain Wm. Lewis Judy in 1928, I became aware of just how many days, weeks, and months of each year are filled with official observances that have been established to create awareness of any number of people, places or things. Some of these observances, ranging from the ridiculous to the sublime, have been around for decades while others seem to be established almost weekly, if not daily.

July not surprisingly is Ice Cream, Watermelon, and Parks and Recreation Month. July also brings Nude Recreation Week and Scrabble Week and is made up of daily observances such as Made in the USA Day, Pina Colada Day and Cheer Up the Lonely Day. August presents Happiness Happens Month, Be Kind to Humankind Week (I know many prefer to be kind to animals, but they need us to get along), and Psychic Week, (but you already knew that).

The Dog Daze also bring us Hot Dog Night, Hot Dog Week and National Get Out of the Dog House Day, observances that have nothing to do with our four-legged friends despite that special three-letter word. For our purposes, let’s become aware of some observances that do.

July finds us thinking of how dogs are homed in some parts of the nation with National Dog House Repairs Month. Personally, I’ve never lived in a dog house (too small) but during this observance, those who do use them to shelter their pups are asked to make sure these structures are well-built, warm and provide a safe haven for their dogs at all times.

August is World Mutt-i-grees Rescue Month. The Mutt-i-grees Movement is a groundbreaking initiative established by the North Shore Animal League that furthers animal welfare in so many ways; encouraging millions to adopt a shelter pet whenever possible. This observance makes us aware that there are millions of healthy and happy animals languishing in shelters nationwide in need of good homes. They’ve named these mixed-breed dogs Mutt-i-grees, a “breed” of dog that while not officially classified, is comprised of the great qualities that make all dogs special. The site also reminds us that 8-10 million animals enter shelters every year and it’s estimated that 3-4 million of these animals will be euthanized. Those are sad statistics indeed.

The Mutt-i-grees Curriculum is an additional innovative program embracing children’s affinity for animals, highlighting the unique characteristics and desirability of shelter pets of any breed mix. Their website states, “The Curriculum teaches social and emotional skills and is unique in its bridging of humane education and the emerging field of Social and Emotional Learning (SEL).” The curriculum was developed by the Animal League, in collaboration with the Yale University School of the 21st Century, and was graciously funded by The Cesar Millan Foundation.

International Assistance Dog Week (IADW), observed the week of August twelfth, was established by Marcie Davis, author of Working Like Dogs: The Service Dog Guidebook. Davis, a paraplegic, created IADW to recognize all of the devoted, hardworking assistance dogs helping individuals mitigate their disability-related limitations. During International Assistance Dog Week we’re asked to recognize and honor our hard-working assistance dogs while raising awareness and educating the public about how these specially trained animals aid so many in our communities. We’re also reminded to honor the puppy raisers and trainers of these dogs and to recognize heroic deeds performed by assistance dogs in our communities.

During the second week of August, we’re also reminded to be aware of the less fortunate among us during Feeding Pets of the Homeless Week. This initiative is promoted by a group of people who understand the healing power of companion pets, and the human-animal bond that is so important in the lives of many homeless who find “splace, protection and companionship through their pets.” In caring for their pets on limited resources, many themselves make do with less. This observance encourages people throughout the nation to think about ways to feed and provide basic emergency veterinary care for the pets of the homeless so that these animals are cared for and their guardians may find relief from anguish and anxiety.

As you can see, there is no lack of special observances established just to honor dogs and those who love and care for them. Whether serious, stoic, sentimental, spiritual, sensitive or on occasion seemingly silly, these Awareness Observances shed light on important matters, presenting a Call to Action from those who can help make our nation a better place for humans and their animals in need of our understanding and compassion.

Awareness: it’s a good thing. I look forward to sharing more of these observances with you. Happy Dog Daze to all – a special time to relax with your peeps and pups. 🐶

Triad Dog Games
Life’s Ruff. Let’s Play!

By Karen Fullerton
CEO/FOUNDER
THE SERGEI FOUNDATION

Each year the Triad Dog Games supports The Sergei Foundation, a nonprofit that assists low-income people in obtaining veterinary care for their pets. This year, the highly anticipated event for the dog-loving community was held May 20-21 at the Winston-Salem Fairgrounds in North Carolina.

Apart from the event’s simple “dog appeal,” its popularity stems in part from the fact that it has something for everybody — from the experienced competitor coming from Georgia hoping to win an invitation to a World Championship event, to the owner of a rescued Chihuahua who wants to enter our version of Dachshund races, “Doggie Daches.”

You don’t have to enter a competition, or even own a dog, to have a good time. Come admire the awesome athleticism of competing canines, visit vendors, eat some food, and help save the lives of sick and injured pets at the same time. Proceeds from admission benefits The Sergei Foundation, a nonprofit that helps companion dogs and cats get needed veterinary care both locally and throughout North Carolina. Tickets are $10 and $5 for kids 10 and under (additional donations given at the ticket booth will be donor-matched, so please consider “rounding up” or giving an extra dollar or two). For complete event and registration information, visit TriadDogGames.com.

DOCK JUMPING

A spectator favorite! At the dock jumping or dock diving event, dogs compete in distance or height jumping from a fenced trailer dock into an above-ground pool that holds approximately 20,000 gallons of water. Ultimate Air Dogs (UAD) runs this event and has competitors who come from as far away as Ohio and Florida to earn club points and move to higher divisions. Beginners are more than welcome to enter the competition; UAD’s event fees typically start at $25 if you pre-register. Many pet owners are curious if their water-loving dog will actually take the plunge. Not quite sure? You can decide while you are there to practice with your dog in between the competitive “splashes” as time allows for a $10 fee.

DISC SPORTS

Sometimes called “Frisbee-Dogs,” Triad Dog Games is pleased to welcome Southeast Disc Dogs to run its Skyhoundz disc sport events. Saturday will feature a World-Qualifying DiscDogathon. This event is for experienced, canine disc sport competitors. Winners in each event earn an invitation to Skyhoundz’s World Championship competition in the fall.

Of the seven competitions in this event, a spectator favorite is definitely Freestyle; it’s both a sport and a performance art. Dogs and handlers perform in creative, acrobatic maneuvers with a flying disc — all choreographed to music. Beginners are welcome to try the novice, local competition on Sunday. This is a simple throw and catch event where you try to get to have your dog make as many catches as you can within a set amount of time. Event fees run from $10 and up depending on your event and how many dogs are entered.

FLYBALL

This is the only event at Triad Dog Games where pre-registration was required through a North American Flyball Association sanctioned team.

How Dog Writers Can Harness the Power of Social Media

By Carol Bryant

Making the leap from dog writer to social media influencer in the pet space is no easy feat, so when the folks at DWAA agreed to let me teach our members how, imagine my glee! Here are 10 quick and easy actionable tips to make magic happen on social media for those in the dog space (or anywhere else):

10. Pick a Platform or Two or Three

You don’t have to be on every social media platform: You should be where your audience is or where you want them to be.

There is an old saying about not reinventing the wheel. To get your work noticed, you do not have to rewrite it; in fact, some of your older content can continue to work for you.

9. One Piece of Content: Many Slices of the Social Media Pie

When you write something once, there are many ways to make that content work for you:
- Create a new image and re-pin on Pinterest.
- Pull a quote or question from the reader comments and share on Facebook to encourage more discussion.
- Create a collage from the post images and re-share on social media.

8. Tweet It Out

Not only is Twitter a place to share news, but it is a highly successful platform to engage with your readers, let brands know you exist, connect in ways that could open doors, and attract new visitors to your blog. Spend at least a half hour on Twitter two times each week. This is a half hour that you are actually interacting with people and not just sharing your blog posts or re-tweeting others. Actually engage in a conversation. Join #BlogPawsChat on Tuesday evenings from 8-10 p.m. Eastern Time. The chat occurs every Tuesday except the third Tuesday of each month.

7. Pin It To Win It

There are studies galore online as to when to pin on Pinterest. The right time to pin is when it makes sense for your followers. You can obtain this information through things like Pinterest analytics and Google Analytics. People come to Pinterest to do, to buy, or to try. Headlines writers can use to make pins:
- 10 Ways to Potty Train a Dog
- How to Stop Your Dog From Pulling
- How Can I Make My Own Dog Bed
- 10 Healthy Homemade Dog Treats

6. Facebook Boosted (Paid) Posts

Use a boost for engagement only. Boosted posts may get shown to people who are not your fans. Paid post engagement is the goal. Boost posts to fans only.

5. Say Cheese

Video integration is a necessary part of a social media and blog strategy. The first six seconds of your video not only have to grab your viewers’ attention, but those six seconds have to drive the point across. Script it and practice.

4. Always Give Readers/Viewers a Call to Action (CTA)

At the end of a blog or social media post, a CTA should be in place to encourage readers to act. You can be straightforward and ask for readers to comment or for their thoughts … or you can be creative. I’ve ended my dog blog posts with CTAs like:
- The third point in this list really resonates with me. Which one is your favorite?
• Has your dog ever engaged in a behavior like this?
• Would you ever use the above products and which ones?
  Be sure to comment back when your readers engage.

3. Embrace Your Inner Insta

Instagram was one of the hottest social media platforms of 2016, and 2017 shows no signs of slowing in the Insta-Space. Choose four Instagrammers with a reasonable amount of followers and shadow them, one Instagrammer per week. Are they someone in your niche or outside your niche? This is a question you should answer first, and then dive in. Watch for:
  • What types of images they are creating: Lighting, indoor/outdoor, pets, people involved, quotes? Get to know the type of image.
  • What text do they use to accompany their images? Is it long or short? Funny or serious? A combination of both? Pay attention to what they are saying in conjunction with the image.
  • What hashtags are being used and where are they placed? I use my phone’s Notes feature to store hashtags for different platforms and then copy and paste them as needed.
  • What are followers saying to the Instagrammer? Is there engagement and likes? You might want to follow some of your favorite Instagrammers followers, too.
  Take notes as to what you are finding. You are likely to see patterns emerge, even if you chose four Instagrammers in four different niches.

2. Put the Social in Social Media

Perhaps one of the biggest mistakes that newbies and veterans alike make on social media is expecting engagement without giving it. Put the social in social media and comment on posts, visit social media pages, LIKE and Retweet, say hello, etc.

1. Join the BlogPaws Social Learning Community

Growing from its annual pet blogging and social media conference to a member-driven online community, BlogPaws has a professional level learning environment open to DWAA members.

Benefits of Agility

in North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia and West Virginia. Come watch these lightning-fast dogs as teams race against each other – over hurdles – to a spring box that releases a tennis ball to be relayed to the next dog in line. Flyball is the only inside event, so it is air conditioned should it get too hot outside! First in Flight Flyball Club of Winston Salem is running this event. They will have plenty of information about the sport and how to become involved locally, including flyball training opportunities.

OTHER EVENTS

Instead of having a formal agility competition, Triad Dog Games is opening up this popular sport as a training and practice event. Enter to try the agility obstacles and get training tips from professional trainers. More experienced? You may pay for timed runs. Brylin Obedience Specialty School of King, N.C. and Dog Gone Fun of Kernersville, N.C. are hosting the agility events. They are also hosting Rally and Fast CAT.

Doggy "Daches" is our version of Dachshund races. It allows all small dogs under 20 pounds to race. In past years, Chihuahuas, small Poodles, Miniature Doberman Pinchers and other small dogs have raced alongside Dachshunds in this very-quick, 30-foot race. Don't blink or you'll miss the finish! 🐾
